RANDALL'S HOME,

Paoli, Valley Forge, and Mad Anthony Wayne-A Curious Story.

Special Letter.
BERWYN, PA., Nov. 19.—One of the prettiest spots in Pennsylvania is the country contiguous to this village in the county of Chester. Not only is it a pretty place naturally and artificially, but the whole neighborhood bristles with historic reminiscences of the 'times that tried mon's souls." I would not have written about Berwyn if ex-Speaker Randall's gout had not been announced in some of the papers of the country as some-thing terrible. Mr. Randall lives "up the road a piece" from here, at a place called Leopard. Here in an humble country home, about eighteen miles from Philadelphia, he Leopard. Here in an humble country home, about cighteen miles from Philadelphia, he enjoys life in the summer with his matronly wife and family, including little Sammy, the baby, a youth of S or 10 years of age, who, I suppose, is just as apt to hook watermelons, tie tin cans to dogs' talls, and play hookey as the sons of men who are not statesmen. The ex-speaker's gout is not troublesome enough to keep him at home in these striring democratic dog days. He left here last week for Washington, and expects to be the next speaker, gout or no gout. The disease which occasionally attacks him is hereditary. Josiah, his father, who was one of the most prominent politicians of his day in Philadelphia, suffered from it, as did his father before him. Berwyn, formerly Reeseville, is a station on the Pennsylvania railway, fourteen miles from the Quaker City. Three miles back of it, away from the railway, is Leopard, a straggling village, upward of a hundred years old. Near by is Faoli, the scene of a massacre by British soldiers during the revolutionary war. A monument to commemorate the butchery has been erected, and the old barn, the scene of the surprise, and the spots of blood on the floor, "which will not out," are still shown to visitors. "Remember Paoli" was the watchword of Wayne's soldiers after the massacre, and "no quarter" rang out on the air as they afterward dashed into the British camps. A few miles below Berwyn, toward the city, is Ardmore, the home of J. J. MacElhone, the

"no quarter" rang out on the air as they afterward dashed into the British camps. A few miles below Berwyn, toward the city, is Ardmore, the home of J. J. MacElhone, the official stenographer of the house of representatives; while at Bryn Mawr. within sight of Ardmore, the prettiest station on the Pennsylvaia railway, is the magnificent home of George W. Childs, of the Public Ledger. The whole read from Philadelphia to Harrisburg abounds with beautiful stopping places, to which the company has given Welsh names.

Facing Berwyn, over the hill about two miles off, is Chester valley, and running into this valley is Valley creek, a sluggish stream which makes in from the Schuylkill, and upon which is located Valley Forge. In a narrow defile, nearly where the Reading railway now passes, from December until May the continental army, under Washington, were encamped in wooden huts, thatched with straw. Their rear was covered with an almost impassable precipice; on the east and south a weak entrenchment was made. The Schuylkill was on the left, with a bridge across. On the right the camp was recessive. Schuylkill was on the left, with a bridge across. On the right the camp was accessible with some difficulty, but the approach in front, facing toward busy Phoenixville, was nearly on a level with the camp, with the

The sufferings and hardships of the patriot army have been well told by the historian. The men were destitute of almost all the army have, been well told by the historian. The men were destitute of almost all the necessary articles of clothing, nearly maked in fact. Provisions were short, an extreme mortality raged in the hospitals without proper medicines to relieve the sick, and not less than 500 horses perished from want and the severity of the season. Desertions were frequent, and Sir William Howe was in Phildelphia, not twenty miles distant, with the flower of the British army. Schuyler and Gates were in the north thrashing Burgeyne. The screech of the iron horse upon three lines of railways leading from the Quaker City into the heart of Pennsylvania can now be heard at the forge. Directly facing the ancient looking stone house in which Washington and his staff were quartered is a paper nill in active operation. Ten cents must be paid for admission into the old headquarters. An old lady opens the dilapidated double door and ushers you in. An ancient flint lock musket hangs over the mantel, pieces of rusty shell, small cannon balls eaten into by rust, andirons a century old, and other rusty shell, small cannon balls eaten into by rust, andirons a century old, and other relics repose in the old fireplace. A settee, bookcase, and many quaint articles of furniture in use by Washington and his staff are shown. The mansion must have been a comfortable home a hundred years ago, and with proper care it will stand for many years to come. A daily record book for visitors to enter their names lies upon a table in the rear room. Not far off is the Valley Forge inn, part of which was a hospital when the patriot army lay there, and within sight is the old forge, still standing, from which the little valley derived its name, and where the troopers of the continental army were wont to have their horses shod.

Gen. Anthony Wayne, who was born and

Gen. Anthony Wayne, who was born and reared within sight of the old Forge, doubt-less urged Washington to select the sight for the encampment of his army in that terrible winter of 1777-78. Among his descendants in this neighborhood is Capt. J. W. Wayne, a member of the state legislature and the legal executor of the old family estate. A curious story is told about the remains of

A curious story is told about the remains of Mad Anthony, who, it is said, could swear longer, louder, and more effectively when alive and angry than any trooper in Flanders. He is said to have been honored with a two-fold burial—his fiesh in Erie and his bones in eastern Pennsylvania. This is how it came about: Wayne died at Erie in December, 1796, and was buried at the foot of the flagstaff near the old block house. In 1809 his son gave directions to a physician in Erie to staff near the old block house. In 1809 his son gave directions to a physician in Erie to take up the remains and send them to this county (Chester) for reburial. On opening the grave the body was found to be in a good state of preservation. It being very difficult to forward the remains by the routes and means of conveyance then in use he proceeded to cut the flesh from the bones, boiled the bones in a large iron kettle, and, when properly cleaned, boxed them and forwarded them as directed. These bones were coffined and honorably buried at the old home of the general, in Chester county. The flesh, together with the two knives used in the cutting, were replaced in the coffin in which the body was found, and reburied in the original grave. The two knives, all rust eaten, are body was found, and reburied in the original grave. The two knives, all rust eaten, are preserved in the frame containing the remains of the coffin lid. The iron kettle in which the bones were boiled is an heiribom in a family living in the vicinity of Erie. The old block house at Fort Erie has passed away, together with the flagstaff and all traces of the general's grave. An old woman, remembering the fact of his burial, pointed out the location. Search was made, remains of the decayed ends of the flagstaff were found, and near it the decayed parts of the coffin and two knives.

coffin and two knives.

The memory of brave Anthony Wayne is revered by the good people of Chester county and of Pennsylvania. The legislature of this state scarcely did the fair thing toward her gallant son in sending down to the hall of statues in the capitol at Washington the marble figures of Fulton and Muhlenberg. Wayne and Franklin would have represented the revolutionary history of the Keystone state much better.

Berwyn and its surroundings are nearly leafless now, but by no means bleak or barroin looking. Beautiful country residences have been going up in all directions during the past summer. Trains are running every hour to and from the city, and a person living in this village, fourteen miles away from Broad and Market, can take tea at 6:30 o'clock in the evening at his home, and be seated at any of the theaters in the city by 8 o'clock, without hurrying himself.

MULFORD. much better.

Mr. Snyder Not an Assistant Attorney General.

A dispatch was published yesterday from Allentown, Pa., announcing that Mr. Snyder, 'assistant attorney general" cogaged in the prosecution of election cases in South Carolina, had tendered his resignation for the alleged reason that the government "did not give its officers proper assistance and encouragment." In reply to inquiries it was said at the department of justice that Mr.

Snyder's services as an assistant to the special counsel presenting the South Carolina cases was dispensed with on the thirtieth of April last, and that he has not been connected with the cases in any way since that date.

At the grain market flour is in fair receipt and may be quoted steady. Wheat is without 'change since our last report and rules irregular at all leading points. The offerings on change yesterday were small and mostly of fair quality; 2,500 bushels were sold at $1.06 for good Fultz; $1.08 to $1.10 for long-berry; no mixed was offered. Corn is strong and active for prime old white, 2,000 bushels of which brought 60c; old mixed sold at 58c to 59c., and new white 50c. Rye is firm. Oats are strong and active. Pork is coming in freely, and owing to the very unseasonable weather is dull and lower. There is no change in other produce. in other produce.
